During that day, one of the two remaining players was surprised by a bat attack and had to be rushed to the hospital. When one of the players finishes a level, the other player has 30 seconds to play his turn, or the game ends. Upon the third restart, one of the two remaining players was once again surprised by a bat attack and had to be rushed to the hospital. When one of the players finishes a level, the other player has 30 seconds to play his turn, or the game ends. When one of the two remaining players reaches the finish line first, the game is over. The game may also be played by a single player against a computer opponent. Each level has a time limit, and the player must play a mine to the end of the level before the time runs out. The player must play a mine as close to the finish line as possible while avoiding enemy mines. This game was the first to be released for the Amiga. The game is also released for the Amiga CD32 and the Atari Jaguar using cartridges. It was also released for the Nintendo NES as the first The Legend Returns remake and the remake includes all the levels from the original. The game is a platformer. It has a single-player mode, as well as a two-player mode. It features a basic system of movement and jumping, as well as a basic game system involving the Lode Runner symbol. When playing the game, the player must navigate through the environment and search for the Lode Runner symbol which is on the ground. The game is played in a platform style, in which the player moves from level to level using a cursor and by moving left or right on a flat plane. Moving up or down requires more time to reach the next level, but it also gives the player a greater vertical distance to move in the level. In the single-player mode, the player has four lives, and after losing a life the player loses all his money and the game ends. There are four types of game levels: There are 4 light levels, 4 regular levels, 4 hard levels, and a time level, in which the player must reach the finish line in a given time. In the two-player mode, each player plays
